

Key features of future work and capability requirements for a thriving workforce

Online

Mark was invited to speak at the National Forum i4.0: People-Technology-Connections. Mark spoke on the 3rd of February, on the key features of future work and capability requirements for a thriving workforce.

Forum i4.0 is the leading online roundtable linking researchers, entrepreneurs and product makers working at the forefront of digital innovation and consumer engagement. Hosted by Swinburne University, with speakers from Australia's most progressive research institutes and the backing of the Innovative Manufacturing CRC, this monthly event brings together boundary-pushing innovators who want to help today's product makers stay ahead of the evolving technologies that are changing modern business models and consumer expectations.
